

The Spider Monkey is captured by placing a large glass jar with a very small neck on the forest floor. Inside the jar there are a few peanuts.

The Spider Monkey is attracted to the peanuts, and slides his hand into the jar. As he grabs the peanuts he forms a fist, and is consequently unable to pull his hand out. He is trapped, and loses his freedom over a few peanuts.

All he has to do to be free, is to let go of the peanuts, and pull his hand out. Unfortunately for the Spider Monkey, he doesn't know how to let go. Who do you know in life like the Spider Monkey...

holding on to a few peanuts, that is costing them their (financial) freedom?
